

Two in a Row for Nahan Printing as it Earns the Sappi North American Printer of the Year Award in Magazine Category

Nahan Printing advances to rigorous international competition

St. Cloud, Minn. – June 26, 2007 – For a second year in a row, Nahan Printing, Inc., a leading commercial printer and complete direct mail business based in St. Cloud, Minnesota has won the prestigious Sappi North American Printer of the Year Award in the magazine category. The company won top honors with its entry of the upscale Bergdorf Goodman Fall Collection 2006 Magazine, which was printed in Nahan's St. Cloud facility. Senior leaders for the company—Mike Nahan, President and CEO, and Linda Linn, Executive Vice President—accepted the Sappi award for print excellence at the National Building Museum in Washington D.C.

“This award represents the commitment of all Nahan Printing employees to superior quality,” stated Mike Nahan. “We are very proud of their dedication and capabilities, and we credit them for this award for print excellence.”

Next Step, International Competition

By winning the 2007 North American Printer of the Year Award, Nahan Printing has now advanced to the international level of competition that includes the gold award winners from four global regions. This isn't new territory for the company. Nahan Printing won the top honor last year and was named 2006 Sappi International Printer of the Year in the magazine category. The company is hoping for a repeat win at the international level this year.

“We are excited to be named North American Printer of the Year two years in a row, and we are equally excited to try to make it two years in a row for the international award,” added Nahan. “The Sappi competition judges the best entries from the best printers, so this is certainly a honor for us.”

The international winners will be announced in October of this year during the 2007 Sappi International Printers of the Year awards ceremony in Boston, MA.

The Sappi Awards

The Sappi competition for print excellence was started in South Africa 28 years ago, and grew into the most prestigious competition of the best printers in the world. Awards are presented to printers in nine categories that have proven their expertise in their region. There are multiple phases to the competition, with the winners at each level of competition advancing to the next level. But only the gold award winners from four regions - Africa, Europe, North America and Trading (includes Australasia, Asia, South and Central America) advance to the international competition, which is judged by an independent panel of international judges. Nine winners, one in each category, are selected and honored as the world's best printers.
